Pagr. What ! poor, you say? Why, save you, friend,

I've more than half the world can show;

Such wealth as mine you cannot beast, Such blies as mine you cannot know.

I've more than keepest head can som-Could ever dream of night and day ; I've treasures hid from sordid hearts,

No cunning thirf can take away. My rithes never being distrust Between me and my fellow-men ;

No evil passion stirs my breast, To yield me hate for hate again.

Bur pleasure, peace, and joy they bring : They mothe my cares, they make me glad, They give delight I cannot name,

And buy me comfort when I'm sad. Come here and open wide your eyes, You see earth's glory at my fort,

You see the sky above my head, The sunshing on my garden scat; You see the love that lights my home, The children round my cottage door-

The birds, the bees, the grass and flowers, And you have dared to call me poor ! Come here and open wide your ears,

And hark the music morning makes, When from the hills and from the woods Her high and hely anthem breaks.

Come here and catch the grand old songs That nature sings me evermore-The whispering of a thousand things,

And tell me-tell me, am I poor? Not rich in he, though wider far His acres stretch than eye can roll,

Who has no smeahine in his mind, No wealth of beauty in his soul. Not noor is he though never known His name in hall or city mart,

Who emiles content beneath his loud, With God and Nature in his heart.-Selected.

Foreign Consulates.

A great number of consulates might advantageously be abolished; and the system of appointing deputies, or vice-consuls should be abrogated altogether. At present, consuls are virtually appointed by Congressional delegations. They urge them upon the Executive and the State Department, and attend to their confirmation in the Senate. In most instances these delegations know nothing of the man they recommend, except that he is recommended by somebody they know, and that the political church requires his nomination. After the nomination and confirmation have duly taken place, the new-fangled consul is informed by the Secretary of State of his good luck. The fellow jumps in the cars, and all of a sudden an altereation takes place between the door-keeper of the State Department and some rough-looking customer, who insists upon seeing the Boss, and claims to have come all the way from Kankakee or Ashtabula to get "them" papers. The officials of the State Department-some of whom gravitate toward the Virginia and Maryland oldtushioned style of good breeding, while others luxuriate in all the stolid placidity of the countrymen of Rip Van Winkle-give to the new consul a rather chilling reception. Of course, be is not admitted to the presence of the "Boss," who reserves himself for a few foreign ministers, and for cabinet meetings. He has about half a second's interview with Fred. Seward, who, with a smile of imperturbable sweetness, hands him over to one of the gentlemen of the office, who hands to the consul a handsomely-bound volume, which contains the consular regulations. Very soon after this episode, a flaming article appears in the Liberty Bell or Bungtown Bugler, announcing the fact that "the Hon. Jeremiah Napoleon Eze- and the same is hereby amended so as to read as kiel Jupiter Jones, so eminently popular in this follows: district, and remarkable for his diplomatic talents, has arrived at Washington; had a lengthened interview with the Secretary of State, who gave him official instructions of the highest importance, and then departed in hot haste for his post of destination, it being rumored that on his way to Sauerkrautenthal he is to meet Count Bourn, at Mr. Seward's special request." In the meanwhile, Jones passes a miserable evening at the Seaton House, in a most unsatisfactory tete-a-tete with his "instructions." The book which the gentleman of the State Department handed him with such a bland smile, simply contains the general consular regulations applying to all countries of the world, and without any particular refer-ence to the particular duties which he may have to fulfil in the particular place to which he is particularly appointed. He soon gives the book up in despair, but has the happy inspiration to buy a "Bradshaw." After having discovered the latitude and longitude to which he is assigned, he is next seen stalking about with a most consequential air on the deck of one of the cheap Inman steamers. He is never seen at the State Department. All they know is that he regularly draws for his salary, and occasionally he copies, from one of the local papers of the place in which he resides, extracts of commercial statistics, with great flourish of trumpets, as if he had been their original compiler. If any language excepting the Ashtabula or Kankakee dialect is spoken at the post of his destination, he holds himself rather "aloof" from society. He is generally taken for an Aboriginal American, and sticks to his post through thick and thin, until, one day, Brown steps in, and says: "Jones you are smashed !" Jones does a little swearing, invites Brown to take a drink, picks up his traps, and the next we hear of him is through our old friend, the Liberty Bell or Bungtown Bugler, in the following strain: "We are happy to announce the safe return to this district of the Hon. Jeremiah Napoleon Ezekiel Jupiter Jones, from his mission to Saurkrautenthal. After having spent several years abroad, he speaks, of course, the different languages of Europe, and has had access to the most exclusive circles of the nobility and gentry. and is versed in all the arts of the statesman and diplomat. Our best citizens paid their respects, hist evening, to the honorable gentleman, at his quarters at the Tomahawk House, where, with his wanted urbanity, he treated his friends to a handsome supper. We may add, that the honorable gentleman is proposed as the member in the of foreign mations." Under the present circumstances, consuls do little or nothing for the promotion of commerce. At a stated annual period they are called upon to make a report to the State Department, and in most cases their mental activity finds its climax in this annual report, which, moreover, is generally copied from other reports, and but rarely the result of pains-taking, original, and exhaustive investigation.

familiarity with the history and laws and systems

By raising the character and qualifictions of consuls, as proposed in the Patterson bill, it is probable that a better class of men will devote themselves to this branch of the public service, and make it, as it ought to be, an auxiliary to the Agents Pacinic Issuesses Co. and Massarray Low Issue-commerce and industry of the country. As regards diplomatic posts, the country has been rather fortunate, since the accession of Mr. Lincoln, in 1861, when Mr. Motley was sent to Vienna, Mr. Marsh to Italy, Mr. Adams to London, Mr. Dayton to Paris, and Mr. Joy Morris to Constantinople.
